Soviets Reaffirm Support for Laotian Coalition

The Soviet Union has reaffirmed its support for the Laotian coalition government despite the recent communist victories in Cambodia and Vietnam. The Soviets have not yet reacted to the Boun Om killing.

Moscow may be sending Hanoi a message that it does not want a military solution in Laos, while indicating to a broader audience that it will not be responsible if such a solution comes in the future.

On Monday, Soviet President Podgorny greeted a Laotian delegation headed by Sisoumang Sisaleumsak, a right-leaning neutralist who is deputy chairman of the National Political Coalition Council. Podgorny expressed confidence that strong Soviet-Lao ties are in the best interests of all peoples of Southeast Asia.

The Podgorny meeting seems to be part of a general Soviet effort to project the idea that Moscow neither anticipates nor wants a resumption of the Laotian war. In Vientiane, Soviet Ambassador Vdovine told the US envoy yesterday that the recent fighting near Sala Phou Koun did not signify any significant impending change in the Laotian situation and reiterated Moscow's support for the coalition.

The Soviet media, meanwhile, continue to praise the coalition's progress toward reconciling the opposing forces. The successes and achievements of the coalition have been highlighted, while pessimistic assessments of the coalition's viability in the light of events elsewhere in Indochina have been dismissed as the work of rightists who want the Laotian political arrangement to fail.

A Husak Presidency in Czechoslovakia?

A Yugoslav correspondent in Prague reported on April 6 that party chief Husak will soon assume the additional post of Czechoslovakia's presidency from Ludvik Svoboda, the ailing incumbent. The journalist said that the move, which would further consolidate Husak's personal power, is expected to be made immediately after the country celebrates the 30th anniversary of liberation on Friday.

Combining the top party and state posts under Husak would be the most likely solution to the problem of replacing the 79-year-old Svoboda, who has been unable to fulfill his presidential duties for more than a year.

There has been a general feeling that the changeover would take place only after Svoboda dies, but the 30th anniversary celebrations offer an excellent pretext for the shift. Although General Svoboda played an important role in liberating Czechoslovakia during World War II, his illness will probably preclude his attendance at the celebrations this week. In his absence, Husak could well mark the end of an era by assuming the presidency.

Tito's Health

President Tito's absence from public view on May Day is sparking rumors that his health is deteriorating.

According to official announcements, Tito has been troubled by "sciatica" on several occasions this year. Some rumors now suggest that his problem is actually a gradual worsening of arteriosclerosis.

Anxiety about Tito's well-being increases each year around his birthday on May 25.

The accuracy of the rumors will be tested this Friday at the V-E Day celebrations in Belgrade. Tito will make every effort to greet the throngs of ex-partisans expected in the capital. He may well have sat out May Day in order to save his energy for a display of vigor on Friday.
